

It boggles my mind that this question is even being asked. Of course third-party ISPs must continue to be allowed to compete on an even footing with the phone companies. The alternative is a monopoly on providing these services, and we all know what happens when the phone companies get their hands on a monopoly!